August Mayer and Grover Brown, detectives, who have made a record in the arrest of thieving Wall Street runners, are credited by Commissioner Lahey with the solution of the Binkowitz mystery. Three of the men are locked up in New Haven. The other two are on their way east from Chicago, where they were arrested. Brown and Mayer declared that more arrests would be made within a week.

Binkowitz, a husky young pugilist, who lived with his mother at 169 Eldridge Street, was runner for Richard Whitney & Co., 14 Wall Street. He left that firm's office on August, 12, carrying $178,000 in Liberty bonds, which he was to deliver to Kidder, Peabody & Co., at 17 Wall Street. He had only to cross the street, but he never got there.

him and killed him for the bonds he stole.

On the Sunday before the theft, the detectives said, Benny went to Myrtle Beach, Conn., where he met six of his friends. Their advice to the Wall Street runner, the detectives declared, was to turn the trick at the first opportunity and skip to Bridgeport, where they would keep him in hiding until the hue and cry was over.

After stealing the bonds, the detectives went on, Benny went straight to his friends in Bridgeport, who hid him in a hotel room, from which he never stirred in the day time. Scarcely an evening passed during his term of hiding, however, it was said, that Benny Binkowitz, actual possessor of $178,000, was not dancing blithely in some Bridgeport resort.

The murder party hastily climbed back into their car and drove off.

Later some of the bonds were offered for sale in Cleveland. Twenty-five thousand dollars' worth have been located in the possession of a broker in this city, and bonds of an equal amount are in the custody of the police property clerk.

The association plans to have its ment of New York detectives investigating the robbery and murder of years.

According to Mayer and Brown, the murder of Binkowitz was attributable to the fact that when he got his job in Wall Street he tried to keep his old "pals." Some of these, the detectives said, were ex-convicts, many of them were potential crooks, and almost all of them were reckless of law and ethics.

Double-Crossed by Pals

Some of his East Side friends were working in Bridgeport, Conn., the detectives said, and Binkowitz frequently would spend his week-ends with them, visiting dance halls and saloons. It was generally known among the "gang" that Benny Binkowitz had a job in Wall Street and tucked hundreds of thousands of dollars under his arm every day.

Just how much direct influence was used to persuade Benny to try the easy way to wealth. Mayer and Brown aren't sure. But they are sure that Benny's theft was undertaken with the connivance of several of his "pals" and hat Benny's "pals" double-crossed him and killed him for the bonds he stole.

There were seven stab wounds in
